SUBJECT

Good-Faith International Proposal for the Voluntary Cessation of Desk-Thumping and Furniture-Striking in Parliamentary and Legislative Deliberation

Your Excellency,

With the highest respect for the Constitution of India, the Charter of the United Nations, sovereign equality and the procedural autonomy of legislative institutions, I respectfully submit this independent, peaceful and non-binding international proposal.

Its purpose is singular: to invite parliaments, legislative assemblies and comparable deliberative institutions throughout the world voluntarily to discontinue the intentional striking, pounding or thumping of desks, tables and other institutional furniture as a means of expressing approval, emphasis, disagreement or collective response, where dignified non-impact alternatives are available.

The proposal rests upon a simple ethical principle:

Human expression does not require unnecessary physical impact upon an uninvolved object.

A parliamentary desk exists to support deliberation and public service. It is neither an adversary in political disagreement nor a participant requiring physical impact for democratic expression. Where acknowledgement can be communicated without striking institutional furniture, restraint offers a peaceful and practicable alternative.

This proposal does not assert that furniture possesses biological life, consciousness or legal personality. Nor does it claim that desk-thumping or furniture-striking is prohibited by existing international law. It advances instead a limited ethical standard of material respect, purpose integrity and acoustic restraint.

Nothing in this proposal seeks or authorizes interference with the internal proceedings of any legislature. Each institution remains entirely free, under its applicable constitutional and legal order, privileges, traditions and rules of procedure, to consider, adapt or decline the proposed standard.

I therefore respectfully request that this proposal be received for consideration and, if deemed appropriate by the competent authorities, brought through appropriate channels to the attention of relevant international and national institutions as a voluntary contribution to dignified and peaceful deliberative culture.

A chamber entrusted with peaceful deliberation may also allow its instruments of deliberation to remain at peace.

With highest consideration and respect,

R NARASIMHAN

GOOD-FAITH INTERNATIONAL PROPOSAL FOR THE VOLUNTARY CESSATION OF DESK-THUMPING AND FURNITURE-STRIKING IN PARLIAMENTARY AND LEGISLATIVE DELIBERATION

FINAL INTERNATIONAL SUBMISSION EDITION

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

This Instrument presents an independent, peaceful and non-binding global ethical proposal inviting parliaments, legislative assemblies and comparable deliberative institutions voluntarily to discontinue the intentional striking, pounding or thumping of desks, tables and other institutional furniture as a means of expressing approval, emphasis, disagreement or collective response.

Its central principle is:

Human expression does not require unnecessary physical impact upon an uninvolved object.

Institutional furniture exists to support deliberation, documentation and public service. Where democratic expression can be communicated through appropriate non-impact means, striking such furniture is not indispensable to participation, disagreement or collective acknowledgement.

The proposal advances three complementary principles: Material Respect - voluntary restraint from unnecessary physical force upon objects placed in institutional service; Purpose Integrity - respect, wherever reasonably practicable, for the legitimate function for which institutional furniture is provided; and Peaceful Deliberation - encouragement of forms of acknowledgement that preserve vigorous democratic expression without requiring furniture-striking or avoidable impact-generated sound.

The Instrument does not attribute consciousness, biological life, pain perception, legal personality or enforceable rights to inanimate objects. It does not assert that desk-thumping or furniture-striking is prohibited by existing international law, nor that every resulting sound constitutes environmental noise pollution.

Where physical impact is unnecessary to democratic expression, expression may be separated from that impact.

Each legislature remains free to determine whether and how to consider suitable non-impact forms of acknowledgement under its own constitutional and procedural framework. No particular alternative is imposed.

The proposal establishes no international authority, sanction, compulsory financing, reporting obligation, inspection mechanism or external enforcement system.

Let the voice carry conviction.

Let argument carry strength.

Let the vote carry decision.

Let the desk serve deliberation - not become its target.

PREAMBLE

GUIDED by the dignity of peaceful deliberation, human responsibility and respect for the material instruments that support public institutions;

RECOGNIZING that parliaments, legislative assemblies and comparable deliberative institutions exist to enable representation, reasoned debate, lawful disagreement and collective decision-making;

ACKNOWLEDGING that desks, tables and other institutional furniture are provided to facilitate deliberation, documentation and public service, and that their availability for human use does not make intentional striking necessary for democratic expression;

AFFIRMING that institutional custom may evolve where peaceful alternatives can preserve freedom of expression, parliamentary privilege and effective deliberation;

CONSIDERING that avoidable physical impact and the sound it generates may reasonably be reduced where they serve no necessary deliberative function;

RECALLING the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, including international peace, sovereign equality, peaceful settlement of international disputes and respect for the domestic jurisdiction of States;

INSPIRED by the constitutional spirit of Article 51(c) and Article 51(d) of the Constitution of India, understood within their proper constitutional scope;

RESPECTING the sovereignty of States and the constitutional independence, privileges, traditions and procedural autonomy of their legislative institutions;

RECOGNIZING that this proposal neither asserts an existing rule of international law prohibiting desk-thumping or furniture-striking nor creates any compulsory international standard;

INVITING each competent deliberative institution, acting freely within its own constitutional and procedural framework, to consider replacing intentional furniture-striking used as deliberative expression with dignified non-impact alternatives;

THESE PRINCIPLES ARE PRESENTED as an independent, good-faith and non-binding ethical contribution to peaceful institutional evolution:

Let deliberation be vigorous.

Let disagreement remain free.

Let approval be heard.

Let the instruments of deliberation remain at peace.

MAIN INSTRUMENT

VOLUNTARY GLOBAL PRINCIPLES FOR MATERIAL RESPECT AND PEACEFUL PARLIAMENTARY DELIBERATION

Article 1 - Purpose and Governing Principle

The purpose of these Principles is to invite parliaments, legislative assemblies and comparable deliberative institutions voluntarily to discontinue the intentional striking, pounding or thumping of desks, tables and other institutional furniture as a means of expressing approval, emphasis, disagreement or collective response.

Human expression does not require unnecessary physical impact upon an uninvolved object.

Article 2 - Scope

These Principles apply to intentional physical striking of institutional furniture undertaken as a means of deliberative expression during proceedings. They do not concern: (a) ordinary and intended use of furniture; (b) incidental or accidental contact; (c) reasonable action necessary for safety, maintenance, repair or emergency response; or (d) legitimate functional or procedural use unrelated to expressive furniture-striking.

Article 3 - Material Respect and Purpose Integrity

For the purposes of these Principles, material respect means voluntary restraint from unnecessary physical force upon an object where such force serves no necessary functional, safety or legitimate institutional purpose. Institutional furniture should, wherever reasonably practicable, be treated consistently with the function for which it is provided.

Nothing in these Principles attributes biological life, consciousness, sensation, pain perception, legal personality or enforceable rights to an inanimate object.

Article 4 - Voluntary Cessation of Deliberative Striking

Parliaments, legislative assemblies and comparable deliberative institutions are respectfully invited, through their own competent procedures, to discontinue intentional striking, pounding or thumping of institutional furniture undertaken as a means of deliberative expression.

Any measure inspired by this Article should be applied impartially and should not be used selectively on the basis of political affiliation, government or opposition status, ideology, viewpoint or other lawful position within the institution.

Article 5 - Non-Impact Alternatives

Each institution choosing to consider these Principles remains free to determine appropriate forms of acknowledgement consistent with its own rules and traditions. Such forms may include, where permitted: (a) applause; (b) recognized verbal assent; (c) electronic or visual acknowledgement; or (d) another dignified non-impact method independently determined by the institution. No particular alternative is prescribed.

Article 6 - Acoustic Restraint

Deliberative institutions are encouraged, where reasonably practicable, to reduce avoidable impact-generated sound that serves no necessary function in the conduct of proceedings. This Article does not characterize every instance of furniture-striking as environmental noise pollution and does not assert any particular medical consequence. It establishes only a principle of reasonable acoustic restraint in support of orderly and attentive deliberation.

Article 7 - Ethical Metaphor of the 'Unheard Cry'

Within the ethical philosophy of these Principles, the sound produced when an object is unnecessarily struck may be understood metaphorically as an 'unheard cry.' This expression is strictly an ethical metaphor concerning human conduct. It does not assert, suggest or imply that the object possesses consciousness, sensation, pain perception, suffering or biological life, and it shall not be interpreted as attributing any such quality.

Its sole function is to direct attention to human responsibility: the absence of a voice in the object does not diminish the responsibility of the hand that strikes it.

What cannot speak for itself need not therefore be treated without restraint.

Article 8 - Parliamentary Autonomy and Voluntary Implementation

Consideration, adoption, adaptation or rejection of these Principles belongs exclusively to each competent institution in accordance with its applicable constitutional and legal order, privileges, traditions and rules of procedure. An institution choosing to adopt them may use an appropriate lawful mechanism, including guidance from its presiding authority, a code of conduct, member orientation, procedural practice or another internally determined measure.

Implementation should favour awareness, explanation and voluntary behavioural transition. Nothing in these Principles recommends or establishes an international enforcement or punitive mechanism.

Article 9 - Sovereignty, Rights and Non-Intervention

Nothing in these Principles shall be interpreted as: (a) interfering with the sovereignty, territorial integrity, political independence or domestic jurisdiction of any State; (b) directing or compelling a parliament, legislature or comparable institution to alter its internal rules or proceedings; (c) restricting lawful freedom of expression, democratic disagreement, debate, representation, parliamentary privilege or legislative independence; (d) authorizing external supervision, inspection or monitoring of parliamentary proceedings; or (e) establishing international jurisdiction, sanctions, compulsory financing, reporting obligations or enforcement authority.

Article 10 - Legal Character

These Principles constitute an independent, good-faith and non-binding global ethical proposal. They do not constitute a treaty, convention, resolution, customary rule or other source of binding international obligation. They neither assert an existing international prohibition on desk-thumping or furniture-striking nor create any legal entitlement to transmission, consideration, endorsement, adoption or implementation by the Republic of India, the United Nations, any Member State, parliament, legislature or other institution.

Nothing in these Principles alters or purports to alter any obligation arising under applicable national or international law. Their consideration and any resulting institutional practice depend entirely upon voluntary and lawful institutional choice.

The strength of deliberation lies in the force of ideas, not in force upon the objects that serve it.

ANNEXURE I: ETHICAL AND PRACTICAL RATIONALE

1. The Object and Its Institutional Purpose

Manufactured objects are formed through human knowledge, labour and skill from materials available in the physical world. When an object is created and placed in institutional service, it is assigned an intended institutional function within that human context. A parliamentary desk is provided to support deliberation, documentation and legislative work.

Use does not require unnecessary impact, and control does not eliminate responsibility.

This proposition concerns human conduct toward material objects. It does not depend upon attributing consciousness, sensation, biological status or legal personality to them.

2. The Uninvolved Object Principle

Political approval belongs to those who express it. Political disagreement belongs to those who debate it. A desk participates in neither.

Where physical impact upon an object is unnecessary to the communication taking place, custom alone need not make that impact indispensable.

No uninvolved object should bear unnecessary physical impact merely to communicate human approval, emphasis or disagreement.

3. From Custom to Conscious Restraint

Institutional traditions may carry historical, procedural and cultural significance. These Principles do not presume that a long-standing practice is wrongful merely because it is inherited. They pose a narrower question:

Where the expressive purpose of a practice can be preserved through a dignified non-impact alternative, is the physical impact itself still necessary?

The proposed evolution requires neither silence nor diminished democratic expression. It asks only that expression be separated from unnecessary impact.

3A. Historical and Parliamentary Context

Desk-thumping has formed part of the practice of certain parliamentary traditions as a means of expressing approval, acknowledgement or support. These Principles recognize that such practices may carry established institutional, procedural and cultural significance.

The question posed here is not whether the practice has meaning, but whether its physical element remains necessary where dignified non-impact alternatives can preserve the same freedom of democratic expression.

Accordingly, the proposal does not seek to disregard parliamentary tradition. It respectfully invites each competent institution to consider whether an established form of acknowledgement may, where appropriate, evolve from physical impact toward an equally dignified non-impact form.

Such evolution, where freely chosen by the institution concerned, may preserve the communicative purpose of the tradition while advancing the principles of material respect, peaceful deliberation and voluntary restraint.

4. Practical Adaptability

These Principles require no new international institution, compulsory international expenditure, inspection system or enforcement authority. A legislature that independently chooses to consider them may determine, through its own competent procedures, whether a non-impact practice is appropriate and how any transition should occur.

The proposal therefore permits voluntary, proportionate and institutionally adaptable implementation, without prescribing a uniform model for legislatures operating under different constitutional traditions.

5. Ethical Invitation

These Principles do not seek to condemn representatives who have participated in inherited parliamentary customs. They invite consideration of whether an avoidable physical practice remains necessary when its communicative purpose can be preserved without it.

If democratic expression can remain fully free without striking an uninvolved object, what essential democratic purpose requires the impact to continue?

The answer belongs to each institution.

Let the voice carry conviction.

Let argument carry strength.

Let the vote carry decision.

Let the desk carry the purpose for which it stands.

ANNEXURE II: ILLUSTRATIVE MODEL PARAGRAPH FOR VOLUNTARY ADOPTION

The following paragraph is offered solely as an illustration. No institution is expected or required to adopt it.

"Members are encouraged to express approval, emphasis or collective acknowledgement through dignified non-impact means, such as applause where permitted, recognized verbal assent, or electronic or visual acknowledgement systems. The intentional striking, pounding or thumping of desks, tables or other institutional furniture as a means of deliberative expression is discouraged. This guidance shall be applied impartially, without distinction based on political affiliation, government or opposition status, or viewpoint, and shall be implemented through awareness and orientation rather than penalty."

FINAL DECLARATION, FORMAL REQUEST, LEGAL STATUS AND SIGNATURE

I. FINAL DECLARATION

These Principles are presented independently and in good faith as a peaceful contribution to the continuing evolution of dignified democratic deliberation. They advance one limited proposition of universal ethical consideration:

An uninvolved object need not be subjected to unnecessary physical impact merely because it cannot object to it.

Parliaments, legislative assemblies and comparable deliberative institutions are therefore respectfully invited to consider voluntarily bringing to an end the intentional striking, pounding or thumping of institutional furniture as a means of deliberative expression where suitable non-impact alternatives are available.

The proposal seeks not silence, but conscious restraint.

Debate may remain vigorous. Disagreement may remain fearless. Approval may remain visible and audible. Democratic expression may remain fully free. The desk need not be struck for any of these to endure.

II. FORMAL REQUEST

With full respect for the constitutional authority of the Republic of India, and without claiming any entitlement to transmission, consideration, endorsement, adoption or official status, the Author respectfully requests:

1. that the Hon'ble President of the Republic of India receive this independent, non-binding proposal for consideration in the constitutional spirit of Article 51(c) and Article 51(d) of the Constitution of India;
2. that, if deemed appropriate by the competent constitutional and diplomatic authorities, the proposal be brought through appropriate channels to the attention of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and such other relevant international institutions as may appropriately consider its subject matter within their respective mandates;
3. that relevant United Nations organs and entities, organizations of the United Nations system, Member States and appropriate inter-parliamentary institutions may, strictly within their respective mandates, competence and procedures, consider or facilitate awareness of the voluntary ethical principles advanced herein; and
4. that national parliaments, legislative assemblies and comparable deliberative institutions may independently consider the voluntary cessation of desk-thumping and furniture-striking as a means of deliberative expression and, where they so determine, recognize suitable non-impact alternatives.

Nothing in this request invites or authorizes any recipient to interfere with the internal constitutional affairs or legislative proceedings of any State.

III. VOLUNTARY CHARACTER

Consideration, endorsement, adaptation, adoption or implementation of these Principles remains entirely voluntary and subject to the constitutional order, applicable law, privileges, procedures and institutional authority of the body concerned. A decision not to consider or adopt these Principles creates no international responsibility, legal liability, sanction or adverse inference.

IV. CLOSING APPEAL

A desk cannot vote. It cannot debate. It cannot determine the outcome of a political question. Yet it stands in service of those who can.

Human responsibility may therefore be expressed not only through the purposes for which objects are created and used, but also through restraint where physical force serves no necessary purpose.

Let words answer words.

Let ideas challenge ideas.

Let votes decide questions.

Let no uninvolved desk bear the force of human expression.

May institutions entrusted with peaceful deliberation demonstrate that principle not only through the decisions they make, but also through the manner in which democratic expression is conveyed.

LEGAL AND INSTITUTIONAL REFERENCES NOTE

These references identify the constitutional, international and parliamentary context within which this independent proposal is presented. None is asserted as establishing an existing legal prohibition on desk-thumping or furniture-striking.

1. Constitution of India - Article 51(c): Concerns fostering respect for international law and treaty obligations in the dealings of organised peoples with one another.
2. Constitution of India - Article 51(d): Concerns encouragement of settlement of international disputes by arbitration. It is referenced here only as part of the broader constitutional spirit of peaceful international relations. The subject matter of this proposal is not characterized as an international dispute or arbitration matter.
3. Charter of the United Nations - Articles 1 and 2: Referenced for relevant contextual principles, including international peace, sovereign equality, peaceful settlement of international disputes, respect for territorial integrity and political independence in international relations, and the safeguard concerning matters essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of States.
4. Inter-Parliamentary Union - Indicators for Democratic Parliaments (2023), Indicator 1.1: Parliamentary Autonomy, including Dimension 1.1.2: Procedural Autonomy: Referenced solely as a non-binding institutional and self-assessment framework relevant to parliamentary autonomy and procedure; it is not presented as binding international law or as establishing the substantive ethical principle proposed in this Instrument.

Nothing in these references purports to modify, reinterpret or create obligations under the Constitution of India, the Charter of the United Nations, parliamentary law or any other rule of national or international law.

FINAL ETHICAL FORMULATION

Human expression needs a voice, not an impact.

Democracy needs a desk, not a target.

Where force is unnecessary, restraint is Aram.

FINAL CALL
